Rebecca Hefele

I've spent over 35 years as a pharmacist, working closely with HIV patients and in the corporate world. Along the way, I've also embraced many roles—partner, mom, grandma—and I've found that staying active through workouts and yoga is key to keeping both my body and mind healthy. Breathwork and meditation are my go-to tools for grounding myself every day, helping me stay calm and focused no matter what life throws at me.

What truly drives me is helping people discover who they are and what they truly want in life. I love listening deeply and creating the space for others to find their own answers. This has been the foundation of my work and practice.

One of the most powerful tools I've found along the way is the Enneagram, a personality test. It's helped me uncover some of my own hidden patterns, and I'm excited to use it to help others do the same—discovering more about themselves and how they can live more authentically.

Gilles Rautureau

I am Gilles, a soon-to-be certified Life Coach and a full professor of biochemistry at Université Claude Bernard Lyon 1 in France, with over 25 years of experience in research and teaching. I've navigated the challenges of balancing research projects, grant writing, and heavy teaching loads while managing career uncertainty and frustration. I've seen many talented colleagues feel tired, unhappy, and disconnected, unsure of how to reconnect with meaning and satisfaction in their careers.

Having walked nearly every step of the academic path myself—from Master's student to PhD candidate, junior and senior postdoc, associate professor, and now full professor—I know how demanding and emotionally taxing academic life can be. I've worked in competitive environments, both in France and abroad, experiencing everything from supportive mentors to difficult colleagues.

Now, alongside my academic role, my goal is to help fellow academics find joy, clarity, renewed motivation, and the confidence to intentionally design careers and lives filled with meaning and purpose.

Beenish Houssain

I'm an adventurous life explorer, humanist at heart, and former corporate marketer and business leader now dedicated to life coaching. My professional expertise spans business consulting, brand-building, communication, project management, mentoring, and creative thinking.

With a Bachelor's in Computer Science and an MBA, I bring analytical rigor to the human experience. My diverse interests include travel, health and wellness, arts and crafts, design, neuroscience, spirituality, and personal development.

Throughout my life, I've followed my heart and intuition, even when social and cultural expectations pointed elsewhere. I find joy in continual self-discovery and exploring the world around me. I've navigated significant changes, overcome burnout, and faced challenging life situations while: challenging limiting belief systems; forging new paths forward; advocating for myself and others; uplifting those around me; and creating space for authentic self-expression, especially for women and those finding their voice.

I am deeply passionate about living a wholesome life filled with freedom, love, meaning, and genuine aliveness. Having experienced the loss of my own spark amid life's complexities—and the courageous journey to rediscover it—I understand the importance of living authentically.

I care deeply about embodying my inner truth and guiding others to theirs. This enables people to align their lives with their authentic selves and realize their full potential.

If you're seeking to connect with your true self for clarity, guidance, and direction, I would be honored to partner with you. Together, we'll embark on a transformative journey of self-understanding, way-finding, and personal evolution.

Jocelyn Berdowski

Born and raised in the Netherlands, I'm approaching my 48th year with curiosity and an open mind that has defined my journey. My path began as a professional dancer until age 28, followed by an impressive academic pursuit resulting in three Master's degrees (Medical Biology, Epidemiology, and Business Administration) and a PhD in Medicine—reflecting my family's emphasis on education and my natural love for science.

For most of my life, I lived primarily "from the neck up," intellectually engaged but disconnected from my body's wisdom. It took a serious burnout to reveal that I wasn't living in full integrity with my authentic self. The past years have been transformative as I've learned to trust my intuition, listen to my body's subtle language, integrate my intellectual interests with my inner knowing, and embrace vulnerability and authenticity.

This journey wasn't easy, but the results have been nothing short of magical. I struggle to find words adequate to describe the fulfillment, joy, and love this integration has brought into my life.

Today, I enjoy a loving relationship of 10 years, deeper and more meaningful friendships, and a flourishing career as a board member of a medical technology company. This holistic success emerged when I learned to invite it in from an open and sincere place.

In my experience, success in love, friendship, and career are all interconnected—provided what you desire comes from your authentic self rather than societal expectations. When you align with your true nature, you CAN have it all.

P.S. I share my home with Sumi, a cat who frequently makes guest appearances on video calls. She comes with the package!

Jodie Palmer

My professional journey has spanned post-secondary leadership, teaching, dialogue facilitation, community bridge-building, and virtual production, each paving my way into life coaching. As a parent of four teenagers I consider parenting its own doctoral program—a daily practice in staying steady amid hormonal tumult, remaining zen while being poked in the eye, solving ever-evolving puzzles, communicating with care, giving autonomy while holding space, cheering wildly, and embracing the bittersweet ache of watching them grow and take flight. Personally, I'm actively learning to embrace uncertainty and discomfort with trust and peace (with mixed success). I love kindness, curiosity, and belly laughs. My passion lies in helping others build bridges across chasms of disconnection, and my mission is to make the world a more beautiful, compassionate, and safe place for all. I hope to be remembered as a leavener, an instrument of peace, a champion of beauty, and a believer in the power of love.

Coaching is a different model of support than mentoring or consulting. While mentors and consultants provide expertise in a specific area, coaching centers you as the expert of your own life. It's a collaborative and forward-focused process designed to help you clarify your goals, identify obstacles, and take actionable steps toward creating meaningful change. As your coach, my role is to create a space where you can dream big, dig deep, and take meaningful steps toward the life and career you envision for yourself. Together, we'll uncover what truly lights you up and craft a path that feels natural, powerful, and uniquely yours.

Gwen Fonarow

Hi, I'm Gwen. I live in Utah, but have also spent big chunks of my adult life in California and Texas. I have spent most of my career in finance and operations at various types of organizations including Fortune 100 companies, high-growth start-ups, non-profits, and educational institutions. The last 10+ years of my career I've had the honor of serving in the C-suite.

The biggest joy in my professional career has been working with colleagues and team members to improve their personal lives and professional performance by aligning with their true, authentic selves. I've helped folks identify their strengths and passions, and change their lives to create more space for what uniquely brings them joy, flow, and meaning. I've experienced this transformation myself—and I believe it's available to anyone who truly wants it! Yes, including you!

I love to read, run, and spend time outdoors hiking, camping, etc. I've been happily married for 20 years and am the proud mom to two teenage daughters and one very cute (but not too smart) dog, Toby.

In the relentless pursuit of citations and publications, it is easy to overlook the most fundamental question of all: What is my version of a life well-lived? This question has been at the heart of my journey since I earned my Bachelor's Degree (with honors) in Philosophy, Politics, and Economics from Oxford. I have asked it intellectually and reflected upon it through my lived experiences. As a coach, I now have the privilege of helping others explore this question, guiding individuals who seek meaning and purpose in their lives.

The tension between security and self-actualisation is something I experienced constantly in my early career. My social self achieved status and security as I climbed the investment banking ladder. But my authentic self hungered for freedom and adventure, and I made short exits to chase the entrepreneurial dream: I founded an internet startup in the 90s dotcom boom; and opened a restaurant-bar for my love of music. At 40, my seemingly perfect life collapsed as I left both the corporate world and a long-term relationship. I felt lost and did something foreign to me - I sought the help of a 80 year old mentor who taught me the importance of looking for The Tree at the other side of the Field.

During my metamorphosis, I shed old skins and grew new ones. My partner and I traded life on hedonic treadmills in Singapore and San Francisco to live in the rhythm of nature and wild life in Tasmania, Australia. I love both learning and teaching. I went back to school mid-career to get an MBA from the University of Chicago. As an educator, I currently teach about the future of finance in blockchain, digital assets and sustainable finance. As a coach-in-training, I am re-igniting the mentoring journey I began 13 years ago. I look forward to working with you to systematically explore how creativity and courage can lead you to a life of pragmatic purpose.

I'm at my happiest when I'm surrounded by nature, playing tennis, or flowing through a yoga practice. Born in Spain, raised in the UK, and always ready for my next adventure—though I'm just as content at home with good food, my cat, and some great conversation. I'm endlessly curious and always listening, guided by ancient wisdom traditions that help keep me grounded and centered.

I'm passionate about helping you find your wellness and discover balance and joy in your life. Whether you're feeling stuck, overwhelmed, struggling with fear or anxiety, navigating changes and transitions, or exploring your LGBTQIA+ identity, I'm here to support you as you create the life you deserve.

Libby Preston

"Don't ask what the world needs. Ask what makes you come alive, and go do it. Because what the world needs is people who have come alive."— Howard Thurman

Hi, I'm Libby. I have a Bachelor's degree in Sociology and a Master's in Social Work and I worked in the area of child welfare before taking time off from my career to raise my two children. Over the past several years I've been on a journey of self-discovery to live a life in alignment with my truest self & deepest desires after decades of living my life for other people and being disconnected with my authentic self.

While I believe the truth is liberating, it can be highly uncomfortable in this modern world when one decides to align with their essential selves, rather than the social selves our family & culture often demands. Living a life of integrity, however, is priceless and deeply fulfilling when we can trust ourselves to cultivate a life of purpose, presence and joy. When we can tune in to our own unique potential & connect with the deepest longings of our inner truth we come alive and align with a values-driven life filled with passion, creativity and self-leadership.

I believe coaching is a collaborative process where you are the expert of your life. My role is to foster a safe and supportive environment that invites access to your inner wisdom & intuition so you are empowered to live consciously with clarity, vitality and wholeness.

Sarah Geary

Hi, I'm Sarah. A Florida native who spent a decade building businesses in Barcelona after college. Those years in Spain transformed my perspective and sparked my entrepreneurial drive.

Throughout my career, I've navigated the full spectrum of professional satisfaction—from the structured world of accounting to the challenges of business ownership. Each role taught me valuable lessons about what works, what doesn't, and what truly matters.

For the past ten years, I've focused on teaching, training, and coaching. I excel at helping people identify their strengths, overcome obstacles, and map out practical next steps. My approach combines analytical thinking with real-world experience—no abstract theories, just strategies that work.

I'm practical, direct, and committed to continuous learning. My clients appreciate that I've been where they are: making tough decisions, changing direction, and building something new. If you're looking for clarity and actionable guidance rather than vague inspiration, we'll work well together.

Malgorzata Mozolewska

My professional journey began with a Master's degree from the Academy of Fine Arts, followed by years in the design field—first at a prestigious Amsterdam studio before venturing into independent projects. After relocating to London, I studied gemmology and established my jewelry brand, which I continue to operate today.

Throughout my career, I've maintained a parallel interest in understanding mental wellbeing and what constitutes a fulfilling life. This wasn't merely academic curiosity; I was navigating my own challenges with depression, disordered eating, and self-worth issues. Over a decade of research and personal development, I discovered effective approaches that transformed my own life. By 2020, I felt equipped to help others and pursued professional coaching certification.

My approach is grounded in evidence and experience. I've found that many of us operate on automatic pilot, influenced by ingrained patterns and beliefs we've absorbed over time. Research suggests that our subconscious mind drives the majority of our decisions and behaviors, often without our awareness. My coaching focuses on identifying these hidden influences and developing practical strategies to align your actions with your authentic goals.

I create a structured environment where you can examine what's working in your life, what isn't, and what changes might bring greater satisfaction. Rather than imposing external solutions, I help you develop the clarity and confidence to make decisions that genuinely reflect your values and aspirations. If you're ready for a thoughtful, practical approach to creating meaningful change, I'd welcome the opportunity to support your journey.

Agnieszka Szafranowska

I'm passionate about applying the insights and strategies I've gained through my professional development to help you navigate your challenges effectively. I recognize that working with a coach requires trust—sharing your thoughts and experiences with someone new can feel uncomfortable. That's why I prioritize creating a confidential, supportive environment where you can speak openly without fear of judgment. My approach focuses on helping you identify your core values and strengths, then developing practical ways to align your daily choices with what truly matters to you. Together, we'll build a roadmap toward the fulfilling life you envision, with clear steps and accountability that transform aspirations into reality.

Erin Johnson

I balance life as a single parent to two young children in the Western United States. As a member of the LGBTQ+ community, I value authenticity in both my personal and professional life. My professional background spans early childhood education and healthcare, giving me a solid understanding of both cognitive development and physical wellbeing. Currently, I lead a team of literacy specialists who work across elementary schools throughout my state.

My personal transformation began four years ago when I became a single parent to my then 4-year-old and 1-year-old children. During this challenging transition, I discovered Martha Beck's work on personal alignment and began applying these principles to rebuild my life. The process of reconnecting with my core values and creating a life that reflects them has been transformative, bringing unexpected clarity and fulfillment.

What I've learned through both my professional expertise and personal experience is that sustainable change happens when we make choices that align with our authentic selves. I now help others navigate their own transitions with practical tools and evidence-based approaches. My clients appreciate my straightforward methods for identifying what truly matters to them and developing actionable steps toward meaningful change.

I'm committed to creating a coaching relationship built on respect, practical guidance, and genuine connection. My goal is to help you build a life that works for you—one decision at a time.

Laura Timm

I recently retired from a 35-year career in financial services, working primarily with trading and investment teams to build infrastructure (people, process, and technology) to support complex trading strategies and investment approaches. One of the things I enjoyed most in my career was working with people to explore their strengths and interests and guide them in their professional development and growth. While I am grateful for my experiences and enjoyed my career a few years ago, I felt stuck and unsatisfied. I realized that along the way, I had started making choices based on safety and security rather than interest and passion. I needed a change. Letting go of limiting beliefs and following my dreams has led me to teach yoga and mindfulness, and life coaching.

My corporate background provides invaluable insight into professional development and organizational dynamics. Meanwhile, my training in yoga and mindfulness brings a holistic dimension to my practice, addressing both professional objectives and personal fulfillment. I understand that meaningful change comes from aligning actions with authentic values—whether you're seeking to advance in your current role, improve work-life integration, or explore new possibilities.

I won't impose external solutions. Instead, I create a space where you can develop the clarity and confidence to make decisions that align with your authentic self. If you're ready for a thoughtful, practical approach to creating meaningful change, I'd welcome the opportunity to support your journey toward a life that truly reflects your goals and passions.
